June 12, 1962 - Tuesday

A little less hot today. I went to the Century Association to consult some reference books, lunched at The Racquet Club, called on Helen Clark, and tonight took Joan Braden out to dinner at the Colony Restaurant. In between, lots of phone calls from Washington and elsewhere.

June 13, 1962 - Wednesday

Big drop in temperature - it got down to 52 this afternoon.

I lunched with Phil Graham and Fisk of Allied Chemical. We talked economics. The stock market still has the jitters.

Left for Boston on the four o'clock shuttle. I met Walter Hallstein on the plane; he told me interesting things about the Common Market. He thinks the UK will squeak in, despite threats from Commonwealth countries.

Charlie Coolidge picked me up at the Boston airport, and took me to his house at Belmont, where I spent the night.

The Coolidges and I dined tonight with President and Mrs. Pusey of Harvard, who threw a large party in honor of tomorrow's honorary degree group. I sat between Elly Lamont and Mrs. Robert McNamara, a fortunate place.

We got up at seven, and were at Harvard Yard shortly after nine. Meanwhile, I telephoned little David who is staying several days with the Murray Forbes at Manchester, before he attends a summer camp in Vermont. He sounded relaxed and happy.

The ceremonies began at nine-thirty with an academic procession. Before it, I had a chance to chat with a dozen or more friends, including Bill Marburg, Tommy Lamont, Bob Bowie, Bob Amory, Charlie Adams, Walter Lippmann and Bill Langer.
